A story of self-love is told with simple illustrations and humor.

Our heroine is a smart little girl. She thinks she is very talented at everything, but those around her are kind of disagree. She does everything from painting to designing clothes, from animal grooming to being a powerful witch! She's not actually good at any of them, but that doesn't discourage her because she is doing what she likes. All the while, her faithful sidekick, her bird never leaves her side. She accepts and loves herself as she is. Isn't the greatest success of happiness and self-love that comes from small successes?
